LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS.

I. Relations between the lymphatics and the connective tissue:
Fig. 1.—Silver preparation of the uppermost layer of the centrum tendineum of the diaphragm (thoracic surface) of a guinea-pig, 2; Fig. 2.—Section of skin of embryo pig showing a blood vessel lying in the connective tissue, 3; Fig. 3.—Silver preparation from skin of embryo pig, 5; Fig. 4.—Extravasation of injection mass through the wall of the lymphatic, 5; Fig. 5.—Sprouting ends of a lymphatic vessel, 7; Fig. 6.—Sprouting strand of endothelial cells forming the prolongation of a lymphatic vessel, 7; Fig. 7.—Bridge formed by a single row of endothelial cells, connecting two lymphatic vessels, 8.

II. Study of the reticular supporting network in malignant neoplasms:
Fig. 1.—Cancer of rectum, 22; Fig. 2.—Cancer of breast, 23; Fig. 3.—Endothelioma, 23.

III. Modification of the Riva-Rocci sphygmomanometer, 37.

IV. Rôle of the toxins in inflammations of the eye:
Fig. 1.—Section from the normal conjunctiva of the rabbit, 53; Fig. 2.—Conjunctivitis; Gonococcus toxin, 54; Fig. 3.—Conjunctivitis; Diphtheria toxin, 54.

V. Taste fibres and their independence of the N. trigeminus:
Fig. 1.—Diagram of the nerves commonly advocated as routes for taste transmission, 71; Fig. 2.—Sketch showing the postural deformity with open mouth and during phonation after extirpation of the G. semilunare on the left side, 75.

VI. Method of sequestrating the urinary bladder in extensive operations involving its peritoneal surfaces:
Fig. 1.—Peritoneum detached from the abdominal wall and sutured to the round ligament, 97; Fig. 2.—Peritoneum detached and sutured transversely across the pelvis to uterus and both round ligaments, 97; Fig. 3.—Omentum attached below the bladder in the male pelvis and a drain introduced into the new-formed retro-vesical space.

VII. Mechanism of absorption of granular materials from the peritoneum:
Fig. 2.—Endothelium of a lymphatic lacuna, 109; Fig. 5.—Surface of peritoneal epithelium, showing mode of distribution of pigment injected into the peritoneum, 114.

VIII. Giant cell sarcoma of bone:
Fig. 3.—Gross appearance of tumor, 135.

I. Framework of the thyroid gland:
Fig. 1.—Piece digestion of the human thyroid; Fig. 2.—Sections of the block tissue; Figs. 3-4.—Sections from piece digestion of dog's thyroid, 34.

II-III. Pemphigus vegetans:
Fig. 1.—Prominent vegetations in the groin; Fig. 2.—Lesions on the back; Fig. 3.—Earliest lesion described, the vesicle; Fig. 4.—Lesion at its most advanced stage; Fig. 5.—One of the papillæ magnified, 70.

IV-V. Clay modeling in the study of osteology:
Fig. 1.—Average specimens of the work of the class; Fig. 2.—Four skulls modeled during the laboratory hours; Fig. 3.—Bones modeled from memory; Fig. 4a.—Dorsal view of scapula; Fig. 4b.—Ventral view of scapula; Fig. 5.—Clay models made from a verbal description of scapula, 80.

VI-VII. Mechanism of absorption of granular materials from the peritoneum:
Fig. 1.—Diaphragm of a dog in which the lymphatics have been injected with silver nitrate; Fig. 3.—Superficial layer of diaphragm stained with silver nitrate, 112; Fig. 4.—Roof of a lacuna in section showing the entry of pigment; Fig. 6.—Roof of a lacuna in section showing entry of free pigment between the cells, 114.

VIII. Use of the X-ray in surgery:
Figs. 1-2.—Sections taken from a case of cancer of the penis; Figs. 3-4.—A case of recurrent cancer of the breast before and after the use of the X-rays, 122.

IX. Giant cell sarcoma of bone:
Fig. 1.—Antero-posterior view; Fig. 2.—Lateral view; Fig. 4.—Anterior view after operation; Fig. 5.—Lateral view after operation, 136.

X. Simple electric female cystoscope:
Fig. 1.—Longitudinal section of the cystoscope; Fig. 2.—New transformer in position, 166.

XI-XII. Obliteration of the superior vena cava:
Fig. 1.—Photograph showing distension of superficial veins, 170; Fig. 2.—Heart showing obliterated vessel, 172.

XIII. Case of neuro-fibromatosis, 206.

XIV-XV. Cure of the more difficult as well as the simpler inguinal ruptures:
Figs. 1-7.—Steps in the improved operation, 210.

XVI-XXI. Pathology of smallpox:

Fig. 1.—Section of lung of smallpox case showing a purulent exudation in an air cell containing streptococci; Fig. 1a.—Section of lung and pleural surface showing large spaces filled originally with fluid; Fig. 2.—Section of liver showing a typical area of central necrosis; Fig. 3.—Section of liver showing a few streptococci; Fig. 4.—Section of kidney showing acute interstitial nephritis; Fig. 5.—Section of kidney showing the special fibrinous degeneration of the epithelium of the convoluted tubules; Fig. 6.—Section of the cortex of the kidney showing degeneration; Fig. 7.—Section of the skin showing the primary infiltration of the corium by the plasma cells; Fig. 8.—Section through the epidermis in the papular stage; Fig. 9.—Section through the epidermis; Fig. 10.—Section through the epidermis showing a curious degeneration of the cells; Fig. 11.—Section through the skin showing a vesicle originally filled with a clear fluid; Fig. 12.—Section of a pustule which has ruptured; Fig. 13.—Section through the central portion of a pustule showing the phenomenon of umbilication; Fig. 14.—Section at the base of a pustule just adjacent to the corium; Fig. 15.—Section of testicle showing the necrotic areas; Fig. 16.—Section of testicle under a high power, showing the remains of tubules which have undergone partial necrosis; Fig. 17.—Section of lung showing the beginning of thrombosis in a blood vessel; Fig. 18.—Section of lymphatic gland showing thrombus; Fig. 19.—Section of a mass of necrosis in the lung; Fig. 20.—Section of testicle showing a vein containing a thrombus; Fig. 21.—Section of lymphatic gland showing an embolus of micrococci, 218.

XXII. Relation of the status lymphaticus to sudden death, death under anesthesia and infection:

Fig. 1.—Changes in the lymph glands; Fig. 2.—Lesions in a Malpighian corpuscle of the spleen, 278.

XXIII-XXV. Ascending renal infections, with special reference to the reflux of urine from the bladder:

Fig. 1.—Longitudinal section of the vesical portion of the ureter; distended bladder; Fig. 2.—Longitudinal section of the vesical portion of the ureter; contracted bladder; Fig. 3.—Transverse section through the ureteral orifice; distended bladder; Fig. 4.—Transverse section through the ureteral orifice; contracted bladder; Fig. 5.—Transverse section through the vesical portion of the ureter, taken just above the ureteral orifice; distended bladder; Fig. 6.—Transverse section through the vesical portion of the ureter, taken just above the ureteral orifice, contracted bladder; Fig. 7.—Transverse section through the ureteral orifice at the tip of the ureteral valve; partially contracted bladder, with intravesical pressure; Fig. 8.—Longitudinal section of the vesical portion of the ureter; ureteral orifice of infected kidney; Fig. 9.—Longitudinal section of the vesical portion of the ureter; ureteral orifice of normal kidney, 351.
